The exodus, from what my family considered to be their homeland for generations, was very traumatic psychologically and physically. It took years to regain our footing in Palestine, but for me it started a new life. The disaster for me became an opportunity. After years of growing up in a challenging environment I didn't dwell on the past or what might have been but started a new life from Day One and made the best of the circumstances. In good time I became a physician and a healer. I got married and started a family. Three daughters later we created a new life and a bright future. In essence, the exodus made me what I became."	2010
