

IDENTITY AND POLITICAL PARTICIPATION IN THE US

An essay writing contest for public middle and high school students in Maryland.

The Jewish Museum of Maryland and Thomas Kennedy Center invite you to reflect on Maryland's "Jew Bill" and consider what it tells us about political participation and identity in the US. Passed in 1826, the Maryland Jew Bill enabled the full political participation of white Jewish men across the state of Maryland. Though the bill increased opportunities for political participation for some, others were still subject to exclusion.

INSTRUCTIONS:

Students are invited to respond to the following prompt:

- What does Maryland's 1826 "Jew Bill" tell us about how otherness, race, religion, and political participation intersect in the US historically and today? How have these themes impacted life in your community or in a historical community you've studied?

All submissions must be in Times New Roman, 12 pt. font, and double-spaced. All works must have a title. Each page must be numbered and include the writer's last name. Entries must be no longer than two pages.
